GRAVI SCONTRI TRA ALBANESI E SERBI Although American first-place triumphe have been fewer in the present Olympics than ever before since the revival of the stories games, yet the United States athletes have captured the highest honors in the seven events. England and Finland are tied with four. Sweden and Italy two each and with four, Sweden and South Aftica one each. Following are the new Olympic champions:

Foss already was the winner of the first place for the United States in the pole vault, but he was urged to go on and break the Olympic record. This he did, and then, after a consultation by the officials, the bar was set at the height so that Foss might have a chance to excel the world's record. When the height of the crossbar was announced an absolute hush fell over the specta-

The crowds in the stands yelled themselves hourse as the feat was ac-complished, white Foss's teammates lifted him upon their shoulders and marched around, the band meanwhile playing. Flags everywhere were waving Three Final Events in unison with the melody of the band and photographers were scurrying here and there in order to obtain pictures

BOOKS ON FRANCE - SOME NEW ROMANCES

BOOKS ON FRANCE

Mrs. Gibbons Writes of Paris and Mme. Duclaux on Modern French Authors

As Madame Mary Duclaux says in her "Pre-War Preface" to "Twentieth Century French Writers," the reader she meant the French reader, but the observation is all the more applicable to the English and American readerwill find many of the names new. This was more true at the time the preface was written, in 1914, than now, as some of the writers considered. notably Romain Rolland. Georges Duhamel and Henri Barbusse have become more widely known during the war and because of the war. This novelty of subjects gives the book both its freshness and its value. Madame Duclaux admits she disappoints those who look for the names o the illustrious spirits with whom readers of French literature during the last quarter of a century have been familiar Pierre Loti, Paul Bourget, Anatole France, for example. But her "Reviews and Reminiscences, "as she subtitles her chapters, bring forward the thought that even in 1914 a new generation and dispensation in French literature was developing. Madame Duclaux is a pioneer in estimating and evaluating the new figures and the new voices. She says: There is, I believe, one of the South American republics which possesses a couple of capitals, one to be used when the Liberals are in power and the other one for the Conservatives. France also has a double set of everything, includ-ing celebrities; those admired by the bien-pensant and those peculiar to the intellectuels. You may be illustrious in one group and barely heard of in the other. Those who adore Anatole France and praise Romaine Rolland, smile sar castically at the name of Maurice Barres and have never opened a book by Pau And, of course, it is the same the other way around-only more so. have done my best to hold the balance even; to group on the right my seemly sheep and on the left my free-ranging goats, in flocks of appropriate number. Her discussions are marked by originality of observation, sympathetic comprehension of the actuating motives of different schools and individualities. penetrating insight into temperaments and personalities and fine catholicity of approach and attitude. Among the authors of contemporary vital French literature whom she discusses are Rolland, Rostand, Barres Duhamel, Barbusse, Claudel, Francis Jammes, Countess de Noailles, Madame Tinayre, Madame Colette, Mile, Marie Leneru, Andre Gide, Rene Boylesve and Charles Peguy. Of these Rolland. Rostand. Barres and Madame Tinayre were virtually the only ones who had Duhamel and Barbusse Americans have especially come forward into great international prominence over the war years. But some of the others are of decided importance and their ideals and achievements are worthy of study by all persons interested in literature.

Madame Duclaux, in a post-war pref ace, gives a rapid summary of what some of the writers have done since the war and characterizes a few more significant names which have come for significant names which have come forward since she wrote her original chapters. She also gives as a vague outlook toward the future: "What will the morrow bring forth—the violent the morrow bring forth—the violent the dithyrambs of stad when he estures to his englier."

Significant names which have come for morrow bring forth—the violent to make that his public first grew to know and like him, and it is always of exciting action and much glamour of romance.

its youth."

"Paris Vistas" is a delightful view of Light. Helen Davenport Gibbons, the author, knows her city well, and what is more important, she has the capacity feels, sees and senses. Her book will be a delightful stimulus to the memory those who have known Paris over the last three decades-and Americans learned to know it, stricken Three Safe Blowers Identified After but valiant, in the hard urgencies and poignant stresses of wartime. Jack London's stories of his later period, that of interest in the pictur; esqueness of Hawaii and the southern eas, are contained in "On the Makaloa which represents what will probably be the final collection of his short fiction, and possibly his last book to at tain publication. Since his lamented death several manuscripts, both long and short stories, have been pub-lished. Admirers of his full-blooded exotic style, adapted to his tropical topics, and his red-blooded plots for short fiction will find plenty of entertain ment in the pieces gathered in this volume, even though none of them is an outstanding masterpiece. The storle seven of them.

Short stories by a novelist are also contained in "The Eve of Pascua" by the Englishwoman who writes under the pseudonym of Richard Dehan. THE SEINE

Mrs. Anna Bowman Writes Interestingly of the French River There is an unusual charm and in-terest in Mrs. Anna B. Dodd's "Up the Seine to the Battlefields." To most the Seine from its mouth to Rouen is virtually an unknown river. Few realize the beauty of "its shores tap-realize the beauty of "its shores tapestried with fruit trees in blossom, its fertile fields the home of fat cattle, its banks lined with snug farms and peopled villages, with its churches, with convents as big as towns." Of special interest at the present time is the little village Le Trait, where, in 1917, shipbuilding yards were established. A garden city has been erected for the 3500 workmen, and the village bas a population of 12,000 souls.
